COVID-19 AND THE MINING INDUSTRY

MIRA invites you to join an on-line panel discussion on the impact of COVID-19 on the mining industry and the potential insurance implications. Whilst many companies and organisations identify pandemics as a potential risk, few have had to deal with a real-life situation and many of us find ourselves in unprecedented times. MIRA brings together a diverse panel of experts in their fields to discuss the impact COVID-19 is having on the mining and insurance sectors, and the wider economy.

Key issues up for discussion will include the practical implications of mining projects and operations entering potentially prolonged periods of care and maintenance, ensuring the integrity and safety of key assets and infrastructure during this time, planning for the safe restart of operations, availability of key personnel, management of supply chains and logistics, and the potential socio-economic effect on local communities. Insurance policy considerations include civil authority extensions and government advices on mandatory shutdowns, denial of access, supplier and customer extensions, contagious disease 'triggers' and causation issues, and potential D&O implications.

Our panellists are:

- Paul Wordley of Wordley Partnership Solicitors;
- Philip Durrant, Managing Director EMEA at Integra Technical Services;
- Tom Holliday, Mining & Metals Leader at Willis Towers Watson;
- Paolo De Rosa, Consulting Director at Marsh Risk Consulting;
- James Fryer, Class Manager Mining Metals & Minerals at CNA Hardy.

Date: Thursday 4th June, 2020

Time: 12.30pm London, UK (duration 1 hour)

To register your interest please email james.fryer@cna Hardy.com. Webinar access details will be sent out to registered attendees in the week commencing 1st June 2020.

There will be opportunity to present questions during the webinar session but please feel free to send through any questions in advance. We look forward to welcoming as many of you as possible.

Best regards
